Harrassment of women in the workplace is a complex problem with links to other social issues, including male dominance and unequal pay. It also contributes to family break-up, psychological illness and poor industrial relations. Not much can be done about sexual harassment when it is a feature of the workplace rather than the workplace itself. But a strong 'not on my watch' response might make it less likely. The coalition government, which has pledged to promote equality of opportunity for women, has dropped a Departmental Equality and Prevention Strategy. It might pick up the ideas in this article.XSDR-10EX: a dual-mode dual-standard dual-receiver X-band radio. A digital X-band radio receiver with dual-standard (60 and 80 kHz) and dual-mode (2 GS/s bandwidth) is described. It has a FM front end, two integrated heterodyne receivers, one receiver for each of the two standard frequencies, a programmable DSP and a real-time host CPU. A DC power consumption of 16 W is typical; with the transmitter's power supply turned off, the audio output level is above 40 dB below the receiver's maximum sensitivity.Access to Medical Care for Minorities Living in the Appalachian Region of Ohio. The purpose of this study was to examine barriers and facilitators to access to medical care for Appalachian minorities. Appalachian minority individuals, who are medically underserved, are often medically underserved for a number of reasons. Two exploratory, descriptive, qualitative research methods were used to collect data from each participant in the study: in-depth interviews and health status surveys. Seven themes emerged from the data, which were categorized into barriers and facilitators to care. The themes were: obstacles to getting to the health care facility; awareness of services and providers; affordability and acceptability; provider access; patient trust; transportation availability; and community support. The interviews allowed participants to describe the impact of their health on their lives and their communication with providers. Participants' health histories revealed their readiness for medical care, which might indicate that they were serious about seeking medical help. The health surveys showed that participants did not feel 82138339de
