Rep. Louie Gohmert (R-TX) urged Republicans to reject Donald Trump's offer to meet with "anytime and any place" during a Wednesday morning appearance on Fox News, calling the proposal "a trap." A reporter asked Gohmert if he thought there was any chance a meeting between the Republican nominee and members of the House and Senate would be held. "That would be a trap," Gohmert said. "I wouldn't want to get in a room with him. I just wouldn't do it." "I'm not going to go see Donald Trump because he's going to insult me," he added. "I'm not going to go see Donald Trump because he's going to insult me," he added. Gohmert said he can't support Hillary Clinton for a variety of reasons, but he doesn't see why someone who has such a foreign policy background would be secretary of state. "She's just been a huge disaster as secretary of state in terms of foreign policy and national security," Gohmert said. "So I'm not going to vote for her. I'm not going to vote for Trump. ... I would say I'm in the opposite camp of most Republicans on that." Gohmert predicted Trump's path to the Oval Office would be "impossible" if Clinton wins the presidential election. "If Hillary Clinton wins, I think it's going to be impossible for him to become president of the United States," Gohmert said. "The only way he's going to be president of the United States is if a miracle occurs." He added he's not sure whether a miracle is necessary. "I really don't know if the rest of the world is going to not be drawn into war because of what Hillary Clinton is going to do," Gohmert said.

Q: What is the idiomatic Clojure expression for a "filter-map"? I'm used to using Java for imperative programming, where a filter-map operation is an essentially set programming construct. In Clojure, I see people do things like: `(filter-map :a foos)` What exactly is the idiomatic Clojure way of doing this? In Java (or C++ or Python, or Ruby) we would write `foos.stream().filter(foo -> bar).collect(...)`; A: `(defn filter-map [s coll] (let [tail (list coll)] (first (remove-empty? coll)))) (filter-map :a foos) => (:a :b :c :d :e :f)` A: `(filter #(= %2 2) foos)` Using a macro: `(defmacro filter-map [[s coll] & body] `(let [tail (list coll)] ~@body))` You can also define a sequence operator like this: `(defn filter-seq-map [s seq coll] (first (remove-empty? (map vector coll))))` so: `(filter-seq-map :a foos)` Note that this will return an empty vector if the coll is empty. I personally prefer the first solution, it's a bit shorter and I find the vectorization in the let binding way more readable.

Q: converting index from disk to memory I have an old multi-million row table (about 2GB in total). When I run the select queries, queries get killed due to I/O timeout. I understand that the index is a memory structure and not a disk structure. My question is, is there a way to map the disk space of index to ram to improve the performance? A: The answer to your question is no. That is not how indexes work. Consider the following scenario: your query is `SELECT * FROM your_table` there is a matching index on `your_table.id` The index will store the location of each record of `your_table.id` in memory. But they still have to find the locations of all the other columns
