immunodeficiency virus (HIV) RNA load, CD4 count, and genotypic resistance patterns in the MRC WATCH trial. This study examined the relationship between HIV-1 RNA load, CD4 count, and genotypic resistance patterns at the time of virologic failure and the risk of subsequent disease progression. From October 1992 to July 1997, children and adolescents diagnosed with asymptomatic HIV-1 infection were enrolled in the Multicenter AIDS Cohort Study (MACS) Treatment Group Protocol N16. Children in the first group were treated with a standard protocol: three drugs (zidovudine, lamivudine, and zalcitabine) started at enrollment and changed to a single reverse transcriptase inhibitor and/or a protease inhibitor as clinically indicated. Viral isolates were tested for drug susceptibility at the time of initial enrollment. The presence or absence of the B subtype was determined by PCR. Univariate and multivariate analyses examined the effect of baseline CD4 count, baseline viral load, and genotypic resistance patterns on disease progression. A total of 236 patients (median age at enrollment 11.6 years [range 5.4 to 16.8]) were enrolled. Ten-year progression-free survival (PFS) rates were 94.8% in the standard treatment group and 82.9% in the modified group (P
