What's new in Fifa 22:

- They're back. The return of the free kicks. Largely removed from FIFA the last few games, they're back in today's iteration. Along with your normal penalty takers, corners, direct free kicks are back along with a longer range. If you like to have a look yourself, all the free kick types are listed here. (FIFA Ultimate Team)
- FIFA 22 gets a return to a more realistic and harder to master defensive AI. The AI also gets a new understanding of when to defend space in order to space out the ball better, after near misses.
- FIFA 22 gets real refereeing, with an improved recreated match engine and more people near to the pitch to the referee. This leads to more "long range clearances", "wobbles" or "slopped" balls, than in previous games from what I can tell
- Players reflect real life moves, reactions and the true progress of a Pro. As the game progresses, players can get into a various states of training, starting the new season in their shape at the best team they could be, where they had to keep work to regain fitness and shape. It is realistic and the weaker players are still developing. (FIFA Ultimate Team)
- FIFA 22 sees the return of Player Secret and Player Moments.
- One up finishing and "bouncing" still are gone and replaced with the quick, simple, light hand controls of the same name. Now when you receive the ball you can make the decision to either "Quick Pass", passing the ball like a normal person, or take the decision to "Quick Touch" the ball, making it easier to touch but more challenging to control and pass. This one is the biggest change. I used to play a lot of Fifa where I would wait to receive the ball, for example, after a long pass and I would take one touch and then choose to "Quick Touch" the ball, away from the defenders and into space. Unfortunately, this made it so I couldn't use drop into a free kick slot. Drop in for a free kick is an incredibly important aspect of the game that I don't think I really properly understood and it was one of the many missed aspects of the game.
