PowerPoint's technology is still the king of graphic tools, but it is no longer the only tool that can be used for presentations. Many different presentations tools can now be used to create PowerPoint-ready slides. These include Keynote, Prezi, Google Presentations, or even online tools like Freemake and Typora. So, how can you choose the right tools for your own presentations? You should know that there is no right or wrong tool for making slides, as each of them has its own advantages and disadvantages. Therefore, it is important to assess these tools before choosing one for your presentations, as this is a complex process. On top of that, you need to keep in mind that each of the tools you use in creating presentations may have specific requirements that you should check before you start using it. For example, some tools allow you to create presentations in specific file formats like OpenOffice or Keynote has its own format as well. Another issue that you may encounter while making slides is that some tools may require technical skills. For example, Google Presentations or Prezi are not offered as stand-alone tools to make presentation materials. Instead, you need to use their online services to create your slides. In this post, we will discuss some of the top presentations tools and provide you with some helpful tips that will help you select the best one for your next presentation. PowerPoint from Adobe: This is the most used tool for creating presentations. However, PowerPoint isn't the only tool that can be used for

It's shaped a little like a notebook but is intended for webbrowsing rather than word processing. It's also a little underpowered but, as the latest offering from the company which started life in its back garden, is packed with attractive features. But just how attractive? Well, it's certainly got a good range of ports – two USB and an Ethernet jack – an SD card reader, and a card reader on the left-hand side. The touch screen can be flipped out from the lid for tablet-style operation. It's also light, weighing in at less than 2kg. On the back is a DVD or CD slot, an HDMI output and a Thunderbolt port for external video or other peripherals.
