Effects of new anthracyclines and anthracenediones on viability and proliferation of human myelogenous leukemia cells: a comparison of the effects of the parents. The cytotoxic effects of six new anthracyclines and an anthracenedione derivative have been compared with those of two well-known anthracyclines in K562 cells. The three new anthracyclines were all less toxic than doxorubicin, but a selection of analogues among the parent anthracenediones and the anthracyclines was shown to yield compounds with comparable potency. The most active compounds were 5,5'-dimethyl-4,9-diaza-1,10-diaza-4,7,10-trithiatricetic acid-bis-1,2-naphthotrihydro-7,10-dibenzo-5,6,8,9,10-pentaaza-2-anthracene. These results may provide an explanation for the heterogeneous results of clinical trials with anthracyclines and anthracenediones. Long-term outcome of patients undergoing incidental breast malignancy in a prospective trial for stereotactic core needle biopsy: a radiology-pathology study. To evaluate the outcome of incidental breast malignancy (IBLM) when detected in a prospective trial for stereotactic core needle biopsy (SCNB). In a prospective trial for SCNB, five centers recruited 1012 patients and 50% of them (n = 507) underwent SCNB for sampling of breast masses. Incidental cancers were detected in 4/1203 (0.3%) and confirmed in 4/50/507 (0.8%) on malignant cytology or histology. Follow-up data were available for 46 patients, including axillary exploration for IBLM in 38, standard imaging for IBLM in 3, and 6 died of other causes. Axillary exploration was negative in 36/38 (95%). Of the 3 with no imaging follow-up, 1 (33%) had a positive nodal biopsy, 1 (33%) a recurrence, and 1 (33%) died of metastatic disease. IBLM is a small but significant finding on SCNB; with few other risk factors, this finding has a low index of suspicion for malignancy and therefore it is important to have some discussion with patients regarding the Artist's Description Overall Comments This is the ninth Fuji 3.0. I first purchased in June 2015 and I keep returning to it, because it is one of the best auto exposures I have ever made. While it lacks the ability to change colors, it has a very good sensor, lightning fast shutter speed and it has the best image stabilisation technology available on a 4K video camera. I use a Fuji X-T10, because it has the widest lens of any professional camera, so I do need the widest angle of view. This is the fastest fast moving, zoom lens for the 3.0. It has the widest angle of view and best quality. The downside is that it lacks the ability to change colors, so if you want to expose for reds, yellows, and greens in the fall, you have to use auto or use an ND filter. For work or looking at portraits during the afternoon, auto will be sufficient. Auto is adequate for most landscape and architecture, but is not good for air shows, small birds, and small animal subjects. The zoom is almost circular, and for portraiture, it can be used to zoom in close and get a blurred background and a larger subject. I think this is the best of the 3.0 line of cameras.
