Your stem length should be what's called the "cyclocross specific" length. And the handlebar width should be what's called the "cyclocross specific" width. And don't forget about the brakes. Mine are not so good so I had to put new pads. They were a little bit longer than my brake levers so I had to cut them down. Hope you find these tips useful.I was born in the middle of the last century in the southern suburbs of large city in one of the most the prodigious spas of the planet. At home I grew up in a beautiful rural area south of the lush vegetation of the Orinoco, not far from the Guayana, large and impregnable river of the most famous pleistocene and pluvial drainage in the part of the continent. Those areas were fantastic and culturally rich. There, I studied and practiced playing the balalaika, violin, vihuela and the guitarrón, characterized by the main conservatory of Puerto Rico, in the famous Luis Pons School of Music. When I was ten years old, my musical studies were suspended by an accident that left me almost completely paralyzed. Since then I began a personal study of painting, drawing and painting, with the guidance of a friend of my parents to whom I give much importance. In 2008 I began studying to the Beat of a different drum, the drums with which I was initiated in my childhood. With a group of friends I am now studying the Jódete Records and LUDAFORD sound systems. The first Jódete record was the record "Hombre en el trapo" with the soundtrack "El hombre En el trapo". This was a record of the sound system El Jódete, organized by Jose Portela, one of the most important figures in the world of latinoamerican music. The beats of the Jódete sound system are the beats of the history of modern Colombian music, which I personally believe have become more and more displaced by the music of the city and its' concepts.

The C++ Standard Library has a series of algorithms for performing regular operations. I want to do a joke comparing the typical quality of code from a typical "developer" in South Africa to "developers" in the United States and Canada. Need to know two things: 1.) What countries/regions/states does a typical developer in your country come from? 2.) What is the quality of South African developers? Will be nice if you throw in some South African examples on #2. Thanks -Martin A: I hope this is not considered spambait, but did I detect a little deja vu? That I saw before by a former fellow South African who took pity on me and answered in full: Martin: No, you're quite right. It's done in the finest English, of the finest standard. And where I live it's considered perfectly normal and ok. Swel. The standard actually reads "the standard library is a standard C++ library that is available in every C++ standard-compliant compiler". I think that says it all really. Mike I wonder why. This also explains why you were seeing some very very ghetto coding and why your righteous indignation was completely justified! Martin I'm not as mad about the case anymore actually, because today you can find the "faulty" code in source-code repositories and also find it in just about every C++ book out there. In fact, it's really sad. Swel. Well you can assume that the code you've posted above is not the code that has been posted on the internet. I'm just giving a representation of the way we think here in South Africa, you know. Our society is generally very communal and generally very open-minded and accepting and with a positive mindset. Mike OK, so what have we learned? The fact that we in South Africa use StackOverflow to answer questions? The fact that we cannot call for an increase in CS-standards, because when we cannot, we blame everything but ourselves? The fact that we still call our laptop Windows 7, despite the fact that we have the current MS-OS and not the older MS-OS? Martin What we've learned is, of course, that we're no better than anywhere else in the world, and that if you
