"We want FIFA fans to get the realistic feeling of being inside a match with improved AI, ball physics, player moves, defensive systems and ball control. We have also invested a lot of time in listening to player feedback and ensuring we continue to offer players new ways to play FIFA. We hope our fans enjoy the first steps and we will continue to invest heavily in FIFA with more new innovations coming in the future." "As we continue to listen to players across the world, we've heard from a large number of them about how the ball feels too heavy in FIFA 22. The weight of the ball has been adjusted and we've taken a number of other factors into account to ensure the ball feels right on the pitch." This was highlighted by Jon Hill in a thread on Reddit. Another Reddit user, Gizmo69, summed it up pretty well when discussing the changes, though specifically about the off-ball weight. In FIFA 18 the ball was slightly too heavy, so I thought that FIFA will reduce the ball's weight in FIFA 22. I am wrong! Changes to the ball physics have made the ball feel light and effective. It's still a bit heavy on the centre of the pitch so I predict people playing on low grass pitches will struggle to control the ball or say 70-80% of the time and have to select the 'control the ball in the air' option when passing. Football is a game of skill and with that in mind it would be ludicrous to state the ball is always too heavy or too light and I'm sure it all works very well. What I do know is that this change was a mistake in FIFA 18 and fortunately for us we can make a change on this mistake in FIFA 22.
