Cancer is a major public health problem in the United States and in many other parts of the world. The vast majority of human tumors are carcinomas, the best studied of which is breast cancer. In the past twenty years, the improved understanding of the biology of breast cancer has led to new therapies designed to block the growth and spread of breast tumors, but these treatments are largely unsuccessful. Thus, a better understanding of the molecular mechanisms by which breast tumors develop and spread is needed in order to design new treatments. Moreover, the signaling pathways that control the growth of primary human breast cancers have only just begun to be understood. The proposed research will focus on the signals that activate the Ras and PI3 kinase/Akt pathways in human breast cancers. The studies are being carried out on the breast cell line MCF-7, which exhibits both HER2-overexpressing and non-overexpressing phenotypes. On one hand, HER2 overexpression leads to an over-abundance of PI3 kinase and the related PI3 kinase substrate, Akt, and leads to invasive characteristics of breast cancer cells. On the other hand, the over- expression of HER2 in MCF-7 cells leads to the activation of Ras, and eventually to anchorage-independent growth and tumor formation in nude mice. By determining how HER2 activates Ras and PI3 kinase, and the role that Ras plays in activating PI3 kinase, these studies will lead to the identification of critical nodes in the growth and spread of breast cancer.
