F-5 Tigers II were test-flown, with orders for two complete airframes, by the United States Navy. They were nearly identical to the original Tiger IIs, and were intended to enter service alongside the F-5A Lightning II fighters in the 1980s.
However, they did not enter service. Design and development
The F-5 Tiger II was a modified version of the Northrop F-5A Lightning II fighter, with the tail, cockpit and engines from the F-5A replaced with the larger, more powerful J79 engine, resulting in an aircraft with a slightly larger and longer in-flight profile than the F-5A. The sole production batch was completed in 1981. The US Navy never accepted the F-5 Tiger II, and its incomplete and uncompleted airframes, and passed them on to the National Museum of the United States Air Force. See also Northrop F-5 References External links F-5

Plasma was replaced by an equal volume of 0.5
