Improved location of the RPE cell layer by analysis of autofluorescent images using a graphic pattern recognition technique. To evaluate a new approach in quantitative analysis of autofluorescent images for improving the site of measurement of the retinal pigment epithelium (RPE) cell layer. In this study, we used a newly developed technique for analyzing autofluorescent images. The spectral pattern of a fluorescence image was analyzed to locate the site of measurement, followed by location of the RPE cell layer. The validity of this approach was evaluated by analyzing spectral images of the eyes of mice in several different experimental conditions. Finally, the applicability of this technique was examined by measuring the site of measurement of fluorescein images. The spectral pattern of fluorescence is a characteristic feature that appears in all retinal images. By using a graphic pattern recognition technique, an analysis of the shape of the spectral pattern was sufficient to locate the site of measurement. The location of the RPE cell layer could be distinguished from the location of the photoreceptors by several criteria, including area, gray level, orientation, and distribution of the RPE pattern. The location of the RPE cell layer could be improved by this new approach in spectral analysis.

Ahead of its showing on FOX's new single-camera comedy series "Superstore," NBC has ordered a midseason replacement, a fresh off-year announcement which kicked the winter comedy schedule into high gear. The order is a logical move for NBC, which has seen its sitcom orders just get passed over with the dwindling audience for "The Michael J. Fox Show," "Cristina," "Superstore" and others. While the current few shows have increased in the 12- to 17-age demo, as of this Friday's broadcast primetime Nielsen numbers, they are still off in the same direction they've been in the previous week. A full 63 percent of U.S. TV households tuned in to Friday's "The Voice" on NBC. Meanwhile, the Big Four have all inched their sitcom orders up since the beginning of 2015. CBS debuted "2 Broke Girls" last week; ABC's "Splitting Up Together" 6d1f23a050
