Native Instruments Kontakt 4 Factory Serial Number As the mother of three young boys, I often struggle with asking for help when my kids need it, and even worse, after my sons have asked for something, I can't give it to them without feeling bad about myself. I know I'm not alone; after my husband and I had our first son, I was so embarrassed asking for help in the grocery store because I felt so low about myself. But this isn't a reflection of what I want for other women. Now that I am a mom to three kids under the age of seven, the need to help out comes up every day. For many women, asking for help is not a problem; for example, my mom always gave me money to go out and do the things I want to do, even if it meant that she had to carry a heavy bag of toilet paper, laundry detergent, soup, or whatever. If I had asked for help at a younger age, I wouldn't have felt ashamed about it. What I want to know is, why can't we mothers of young kids ask for help today when we need it? While I never had a problem asking for help from my mom, it was very obvious that she wasn't ready to help me out with some of the things I needed to do. She had four kids and had to juggle too much to be able to help me, as did many other moms in the 1950s. In modern-day parenting, mothers of toddlers, preschoolers, and elementary schoolers are doing it all: cooking, cleaning, doing laundry, making sure the kids eat, play, and learn. As much as these tasks are necessary, they can be overwhelming. Since they're not just juggling one thing, but many, in fact most, they need help. I always thought my struggle came from being the only kid at home, along with the fact that I didn't feel I needed help. But I was recently reminded that there are other moms and moms-to-be who struggle with this very same problem. I was inspired to ask some of them, and I was relieved to find that many have not experienced the same struggle in asking for help. So how can we mothers of young kids ask for help today? It's not like we're having another baby every other month or we have toddlers growing out of everything. As moms of kids of a certain age, we have plenty of time to learn
