The fusion of the superior nasal concha with the dura mater plays an important role in the development of these sinuses. The frontal sinus is located in the frontal bone. It distinguishes between the upper, middle and lower (anterior) surfaces. The upper and lateral openings of the frontal sinus are located on the medial surface of the frontal bone. Through these openings, the cavity of the frontal sinus communicates with the nasal cavity. The frontal sinus has anterior and posterior walls. 0946cee1be
